

LET THE WORDS OF MY MOUTH, AND MEDITATION OF MY HEART, BE ALWAYS ACCEPTABLE IN THY SIGHT, O LORD, MY STRENGTH AND MY REDEEMER

Advent 3

The emphasis of Advent is on the preparation of God's people for the coming of the Messiah. It is often talked about that Advent is a time of penitential preparation and the accompanying fears and worry about being unprepared when that time comes. Our collect for today, asks God to help us, who are “ministers and stewards of his mysteries” to do our job of preparing the people, to receive Him as their judge.

Our New Testament lesson tells of the birth of John the Baptist, whose call to repentance was a prelude to the ministry of Jesus on earth. The Old Testament lesson tells of the calling of Jeremiah to join the long line of prophets who discerned and announced the intention of God, to send a savior who would bring justice, as well as salvation and peace to His people.

God's words to Jeremiah predicts the fate of those who join that long line of prophets, which began with Moses and ended with John the Baptist:

“They will fight against you, but they shall not prevail against you, for I am with you to deliver you.”

To be a real prophet, is not an easy or pleasant job. On the surface, it seems like it would be a rewarding and inspiring job.

One would expect that the work of preparing for the coming of the Messiah would be a happy task. But the church insists on somber purple as the color of Advent, and the world insists on persecuting those who are sent to prepare the way for Christ.

The problem arises from the fact that people in positions of power like things the way they are, they do not like change that doesn't come from them. That is why it was the poor and powerless people, the people on the margins of society, who responded favorably to the words and works of both Jesus and John the Baptist while the elite sought to silence them both.

The message that a savior is coming carries an ominous implication. It implies that a savior is needed. If a savior is needed, then something must be wrong somewhere. The message of Advent is that something is wrong. Something is wrong with society, and more importantly, something is wrong with the people who make up society. Something is wrong with all of us.

People tend to cling to what they know, even if they are not happy with it, rather than take a chance on something that could be worse. It is human nature. It is uncomfortable to change the circumstances under which we live.

But if changing the circumstances under which we live is uncomfortable, changing our own selves is downright painful. It is painful to look deeply into our own hearts and realize that the real problems are located within us. It is frightening to realize that it is you who must change and not the people around you. The classic holiday story “A Christmas Carol” is about redemption. Scrooge has lived his life uncaring and oblivious of the suffering of others, focused only on his own accumulation of wealth. He is given a chance at redemption, but it is not one he does willingly, at first. He sees through the visits by the spirits where he has come and where he is going. It is so frightening that he knows that he needs to make change in his life or his fate will not be what he wants it to be. He vows to set a new path for himself, to embrace others, and realizes he must take accountability for the life he is living.

Advent is a call to face that realization.

It is easier to blame our circumstances rather than ourselves for the way we live. That may be the real reason that people don't like to change how they live, or the people with whom they live, or what they believe about their life. If they did, then they would no longer be able to locate their problems outside of themselves. They would have no more excuses, rationalizations, or justifications for their behavior. They would have to do what Advent calls us to do. Look inside. Examine your own soul. Get rid of what is sinful and make room for what is Godly.

The world into which Jesus came had the same institutions as the world we live in today. Rome was the center of political life. Athens was the center of intellectual life. Corinth was the center of commercial life. Jerusalem was the center of religious life. But Jesus was not born and did not grow up in any of those places. He was born in the sleepy little village of Bethlehem and grew up in the country town of Nazareth. God was not really interested in changing society. He was interested in changing people's hearts. This is still true today.

So the call to repentance is directed to each one of us individually.

When you stand before the judgment seat of God, you will answer for your own sins, not for the sins of others. While that day may be daunting for us, here is the important thing to consider. You can lay all your sins on Jesus and let Him answer for them in your behalf.

Now is a good time to dig out your sins and examine them. Look deep inside, not only at the things you have done but at the things you should have done and failed to do. Read the decalogue and ask yourself how you have violated the commandment of God. Look at your attitudes. Look at your core values. Look at your relationships with other people. Look at how you spend your time, and your money. Look at what you are doing with the abilities that God has given you. Ask yourself, does what you are doing glorify God?

If you don't like what you see when you examine those things, or if you think that God will not like what He sees when He examines you, then the time to change is now.

Understand, we are sinful, and we can't do it by ourselves. The good thing is you don't have to go at it alone. God has made available to you many resources: the Scriptures, the Prayer Book, and especially your fellow Christians, who will be glad to pray for you if you ask. But mostly God has sent His Son to pay the penalty that your sins have incurred.

As St. Paul says, “God made him who had no sin, to be sin for us, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God.”

And God also sends the Holy Spirit to guide you, encourage you, comfort you and strengthen you to make the changes that you need to make. These changes will not come from your environment but within yourself.

A message like that is not likely to be popular. That is why God says to Jeremiah, “They will fight against you, but they shall not prevail against you, for I am with you to deliver you.” But popular or not, the call to examine and repent is the churches Advent message and my message to each of you today.

The Lord be with you.....

Let us pray, again the words of today's Collect:

O Lord Jesus Christ, who at thy first coming didst send thy messenger to prepare thy way before thee; Grant that the ministers and stewards of thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready thy way, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at thy second coming to judge the world, we may be found an acceptable people in thy sight, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit ever, one God, world without end.
